To whom it may concern,

I greatly enjoyed reviewing your guide as it was both a great opportunity and very informative, containing detailed and interesting data about high-altitude gardening. The guide did a great job in covering most of the gardening process, from soil selection to pest control. The abundance of information thus motivated me to edit the guide for overall consistency and eligibility. It was very important for the guide to have concise language when instructing its reader without withholding any of its information. The guide needed to continuously follow a logical line of reasoning even when transitioning from stage to stage of gardening. This led to format changes, punctuation checking, and sentence restructuring but with none of the information ever removed; rather, the guide's organization was better adapted to the flow of the gardening process, clearly marking sections the reader could refer to later. The final product is a guide that is more easily referred to by its audience. I hope these changes aid you in your quest to spread the word of the wonders of high-altitude gardening.

Best,
